

The WAWARN Committee is still struggling. The network works fine but committee structure could be better.

WAWARN has 127 member utilities, several new members this winter. Several of our members have not entered information about their Mutual Aid Agreement, attempts have been made to get them to correct this, and about seven have been successful. The web site is operational. Many notices relating to security or emergency planning were sent this quarter including some on cybersecurity. The members were asked to update their contact list.

We will attempt to have a WAWARN Committee Meeting in Tacoma, although they have been poorly attended in the past.

The WAWARN is mostly a web site with a process to track the Mutual Aid Agreements and where members can request assistance. There appears to be little or no interest in having meetings. I remain open to ideas about how WAWARN can be more than it currently is.

We beginning a process to design a Functional WARN Exercise with EPA. Exercise will be scheduled for this fall and will be open to all utilities.
