RE: Washington Water Utilities Council – Spring 2018 Committee Report

Activities and Focus for 2018

The WWUC continues to monitor and participate on behalf of the water industry in relevant litigation, regulation, and legislation. The significant areas of focus over the past several months since our last report are specifically addressed below.

Legislative Activities

The WWUC serves as a state legislative monitoring, information, and coordination resource for its member utilities. In the 2018 short Washington State legislative session, the key bills of interest to water utilities that passed were the bills addressing Hirst and Foster and the capital and operating budgets. Other bills that passed were related to unit priced contracting by cities and training on public works and prevailing wage requirements.

Regulatory Activities

The WWUC routinely analyzes proposed Washington State agency guidance and policy documents, as well as rules and regulations, for their impact on WWUC members. We also regularly discuss proposals with agencies and provide informal and/or formal review and comment. In addition, the WWUC participates in or tracks stakeholder processes convened by state agencies to address pressing water issues. Below are some of the major activities underway:

- The WWUC is continuing to work with the Department of Health and Department of Ecology on water rights issues relating to small or failing water system consolidation.
- The WWUC is also tracking the Department of Health's rulemaking for PFAS.

Judicial Activities

The WWUC monitors court cases and appeals involving water rights and other relevant legal issues. A considerable amount of both committee and meeting time is dedicated to this work. One significant case, Crown West Realty v Ecology now at the Court of Appeals, has potential implications to municipal water suppliers for protecting their water rights from relinquishment.

WWUC is working on an amicus brief to address these concerns and will continue to actively track this case.

The WWUC is continuing to track appeals arising from or in the context of water right actions following a small system water system consolidation, which relates to the inter-agency effort described above. The WWUC continues to be concerned about how the Department of Ecology is implementing provisions of the 2003 Municipal Water Law and is monitoring agency steps and any appeals.

Membership and Financial Situation

Overall, we continue to have good attendance at meetings and active participation in decisions. The work of the WWUC is well appreciated and respected throughout the water community in Washington State and also by affected stakeholders. We anticipate staying active throughout the legislative session and engaging in litigation that pertains to our mission.
